Sunflor

The Sunflor® Series consists of a wide assortment that contains typical compact, retail, hybrid and garden types. To make it easier to choose your perfect Sunflor® mix, the assortment is divided into four groups: bench-run selections, bench-run extensions, intermediate and collection.

The varieties of the bench-run selections and bench-run extensions groups can be easily combined, because these varieties have similar growing habits and speed.

Beetle

Esta

Allura

Skylar

Bench-run selections

All varieties in this group have caryophyllus plant habits. The varieties are compact with the typical curled and broad shape leaves. This group of varieties is fast and uniform, which makes it the perfect group for bench-run programmes. The varieties of the caryophyllus and interspecific groups can be easily combined, because these varieties have similar growing habits and speed.

Bench-run extensions

The varieties in this group are interspecific types of Dianthus. The plants are compact and have grassy, narrow shaped leaves. These varieties are fast and uniform and also very suitable for bench-run programmes. The varieties of the bench-run selections and extensions groups can be easily combined, because these varieties have similar growing habits and speed.

Intermediate

The varieties in the intermediate group have an average growing speed compared to the varieties in the interspecific and caryophyllus groups. The varieties are medium to tall with the characteristics of the bench-run types. Intermediate varieties flower two weeks later than bench-run types. These varieties brighten up the series for colour and flower size.

Collection

The varieties in the collection group have the typical Dianthus caryophyllus plant habits. The growing habits are compact to tall with the typical curled and broad shape leaves. The flower size is bigger than average, and this collection contains several unique colours. These varieties are often combined with the other groups although the average growing speed is slower.
